Their Outings.

THE COMING OF EASTER.

The Last Days of Lent and the Gay Time That is to Follow-Where Some Well-Known People Will Go When They Leave Town-Club Meetings and Other Events.

Society stops entirely the coming week-the last one before Easter Sunday. Lent has been thoroughly interesting in every way, as it always is sure to be inauguration year. A inauguration year. A circumstances has kept nearly all the prominent people here, and there is no evidence that they into hasten away for some yet. A great many are staying because they want to do so and would rather do so than face the rigors of their home climates at this season. There have a few real spring days slipped in between the rainy and the gloomy ones lately, and they gave an impulse to spring preparations on all sides. In the parks spring is very much in evidence. The crocuses commenced to peep up over a fortnight ago and they are brave enough and hardy enough now to stand any amount of March wind. The terraces around the White House gardens are as given the office seekers something to talk of as they wended their way to the mansion. When spring flowers come so do society's new clothes, and anybody who is anybody nowadays is busy gesting ready her Easter finery. Of course the real smart folks all not wear their new gowns and hats on Easter Sunday. New clothes are too common that day, but they will keep these fascinating The formal entertainments after Easter are not likely to be very numerous. There will be plenty weddings, however, and of the most interesting, character, too. There will be a great many with the usual enthusiasm immediately

It gins to look as if Washington would see the Mrs. Bryan. first, however, of their new spring gowns of the Senators' wives and daughters and they will all be here to give the gayeties Easter. A little inquiry last week showed that nearly all the official world in arranging its plans for rest, recreation and travel for the spring and summer have allowed a generous margin for a visit at the world's fair. It may other people to settle on their summer dules to hear about them. The Vice President and Mrs. Stevenson, when they can leave this city, first of all intend to go back to their home in Bloomington. When their daughters are out of school the family will go to Chicago to spend a month and devote themselves to seeing the world's fair. There is an example well worth imitating by every good American who can afford it. Senator and Mrs. Stanford are as yet undetermined whether they will visit the world's fair on their way home to the Pacific coast or make a trip overland during the summer for They expect to spend most of Palo Alto, at Menlo Park, Cal., with trips to the mountains and seashore whenever they feel the necessity of a little change. They hope to be at home for the commencement exercises of the Leland Stanford Junior University in May. Ex-President Harrison's lectures to the students of the university will not be given until Senator and Mrs. Cockrell expect to remain here until the early summer, on account of their children being at school. They may determine to visit the world's fair in May, but if they do one go then they surely will do so sometime during the summer. Miss Marian Cockrell is now in Faris. Her first week in a foreign land was spent in London where the defeate of schotzening and the

and comfortable new country house at Laurel to go to this summer, and they look forward with great pleasure to a restful sojourn there. They will stay in this city until the latter part of April, or if the weather is not sufficiently warm and tempting until a little later in May before they go out the country. Of course they do not expect to stay there all summer, as they always do spend a long time at Saratoga during the height of the season, and besides that all their family of young people must see the world's fair some me between May and October. Senator and Mrs. Gibson have their attractive country place to lure them homeward as soon as the fine weather comes along. They have piles of invitations for delightful trips any yet. The one which presents most advantages is on the Pacific coast and the ellowstone Park and there is a stav in Chicago to be arranged for some time, but just at present they have determined upon nothing except a nice quiet stay down to their home managed to travel a great deal faster than they could to the effect that they were spending their summer in camp, where the former chopped the wood and built the fires while the latter did the frugal cooking. As they hate to spoil a real good story they would be glad to see this statement amended something after this fashion: "Senator and Mrs. Frye will remain on their farm (they have not any) from ploughing time to the harvest. The former will drive the horses while Mrs. Frye holds to the plough and drops the corn and potatoes. Later on the Senator will mow the ripened grass and Mrs. Fry, like Maude Muller, will rake the newmown hay. During a holiday at the seaside from these unusual labors the Senator will catch lobsters and the latter will sell them. Mrs. Free thinks that if there will be any reason to change these plans, and it is very likely abundant reasons will, the world will run along without knowing anything about it, and they will be securing their rest and recreation in the

A GROWING PUBLIC TASTE. illustration in the bill which was passed at the dorsed the following applicants for positions in last session of Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invite from architects designs and plans for the erection of public buildings in various parts of the country. The purpose of the bill was evidently to secure in the design of the government buildings the best skill of the country, although there were not wanting those who claimed that it was merely a scheme on the part of architects to get work. No doubt that will be one of the results, but at place in the bureau of printing and engraving; Miss Nellie Johnson, for place at parting room the same time there is a strong hope that the character of our public buildings will show a reflection intended on the able architects and their assistants in the office of the supervising architect of the treasury, where all work of this kind has heretofore been done, It has been admitted for some time that the supervising architect was unable, owing to the presother duties, to give much time or attention to the purely professional part of his duties, and that therefore, however able he might be, his skill and training was not available in the creation of appropriate and artistic designs. The style of the public buildings rected in recent years has been severely criticised, and under the method which is now proposed it will be possible to engage the best talent of the country in preparing designs. The advantage of scattering over this country good examples of architecture as adapted modern needs can hardly be estimated, and the plan is fairly tried no doubt the taste and the ideas of the people generally as to what is good will be very materially affected.

The Trolley Wire is a Great Boon From the New York Recorder, March 24.

Trolley car No. 1109 of the Third Avenue

Brooklyn Line was on its way downtown, fairly filled with passengers, at 8:15 last night. It was making good speed until it reached the Adams street corner. At that point the trolley wires of the Fifth Avenue Line join those of the main line. Just there the trolley arm slipped from the wire and jammed between it and the wooden box above, short-circuiting the trolley wire by forming a connection between it and the elevated structure from which the box was suspended.

There was a sharp flash as of lightning. The people on the sidewalk opposite were almost sengers hurriedly made their escape from the car, and were just in time to see the trolley wire on the downtown side turn to a bright red and begin to sputter and burn. This extended from Myrtle avenue to Willoughby street, a distance of 1,000 feet. All along the block people deserted the sidewalk and ran for shelter into the storms. stores.

The intense heat melted the connections an

Lots of republicans who are lukewarm upon the tariff issue have changed and are flocking to the standards of the democracy. As we believe that we have everything on our side on the tariff question we think that the fight on this ground will inure greatly to the benefit of the democratic party.

"Hotel guests," said the clerk to THE STAR representative, "may be divided into several classes. The class which is most popular with us is the satisfied guest. He is always pleasant and genial, never kicks or growls at anything, and treats us generally as if he was under obligations to us. When he arrives he says 'Well, here I am again, old fellow,' and when he goes away he says 'Good-bye till you see me again.' He is always willing to thank us for courtesies which we extend and we put ourselves out to oblige him. "The meanest class of hotel guests is that
